

Jenna Frink

Jenna is the daughter of Mike and Amy Frink of Eaton, CO. She is an 11-year member of Wyatt 4-H Club and was involved in Market Lambs and Breeding Sheep. She is currently a sophomore at CSU studying a career in food animal nutrition or meat processing. She has found herself to be thoroughly invested in the College of Agriculture at CSU and more specifically the animal science and agriculture business departments. She has a strong passion for production agriculture and her long term career goal is to have a beneficial impact on the agriculture industry.

Jenna can still recall the day she finally got to show in the show ring for the first time. In May of 2006 she was at the Little American Royal Livestock Show in Kersey. It was a small jackpot but the beginning of what sparked a passion for the livestock industry. That summer she learned what hard work and dedication was. In order to prepare for the county fair and state fair, she worked her lambs repeatedly every day. There were times she wanted to give up until her parents reminded her that she would only get as much out of her project as she put in to it. That drove her to work harder for the exact reason that she didn't want to lose.

In 4-h Jenna gained countless leadership and citizenship skills that are irreplaceable. In her 4-H club, she held various offices such as President, Vice President and Treasures. 4-H has also taught her that it is very important to give back to your community.

Every time I attend a livestock show Jenna is reminded that 4-H and showing livestock is the single greatest thing her parents got her involved in. Looking back on the past 11 years that she was involved in 4-H, she knows exactly where some of the greatest life lessons she has developed came from. 4-H has been an instrumental part in preparing Jenna for her future, leaving her forever grateful.

Jenna Frink is the recipient of the Gene Inloes Memorial Livestock Judging Scholarship.
